Fleet Letter #4

Early-Departers Make the Jump

Although the majority of Pacific Puddle Jumpers head west in March and April, it's not unusual to have a few early birds in every PPJ fleet.

This year, as you can see on our fleet tracking page <https://forecast.predictwind.com/tracking/rally/pacificpuddlejumps2023/>, the first boat to complete the crossing was Sam Whittemore's Transpac 49 Havili. She made landfall at Nuku Hiva February 14, having departed from Ventura, CA in late January.

Sailing on a completely different course, the St. Francis 50 Side Two, is the second track seen on the PPJ tracking map. Before departing from Panama, Mark and Angela Johnson combined cruising with philanthropy: "We just completed over 4 months of service with Floating Doctors in Bocas del Toro, Panama. We provided dental care to over 25 indigenous communities every 12 weeks with the equipment we brought down on our boat, and donated to Floating Doctors when we were done."

Side Two is based in Tiverton, Rhode Island. With any luck, she could make landfall tomorrow at Hiva Oa.

Congratulations to both crews!

Making Landfall — What to Expect

French Polynesia's Department of Maritime Affairs, DPAM, lists more than a dozen places where visiting sailors could clear in. But in reality almost all arriving cruisers clear in at either Nuku Hiva or Hiva Oa in the Marquesas. A few clear in at Rikitea, in the Gambier Archipelago, and some – generally megayachts – travel directly to Tahiti and clear in there.

What about Fatu Hiva? Despite what you may have heard or read in old cruising guides, it is illegal to first make your initial landfall at famously beautiful Fatu Hiva — the most easterly isle in the archipelago. You can incur substantial fines if you do.

Here are a few notes about your arrival in the Marquesas that we hope will be useful:

If you've heard veteran Puddle Jumpers talk about making landfall in the Marquesas, you know that it's usually a joyful, uplifting experience. The dramatic volcanic peaks of the larger islands are often seen from offshore a day or more before arrival. And during the final hours of approach, it's not unusual to smell the sweet fragrance of tropical flowers wafting on the breeze.

The main argument for clearing in at Hiva Oa is that it lies farther to the east than most of its sister isles, which means your travels from there to other islands within the archipelago will usually be off the wind. Conversely, Nuku Hiva has a much larger main anchorage, Taiohae Bay, and more services, but if you choose to go there first, you'll have to do a bit of upwind sailing in order to visit the other islands in this group.

About Nuku Hiva

Taiohae Bay is well-protected from almost all sides, as it was formed from an ancient volcano's caldera. With plenty of room for 100 boats or more, its broad anchorage offers good holding on a mud bottom, roughly 35 - 50 feet deep.

While most prudent skippers lay offshore until daylight to enter, nighttime entry into the outer bay is possible, especially with substantial moonlight. Most sailors find Taiohae to be a fine refuge in which to rest, recuperate and resupply, despite the common complaint (particularly from monohullers) that it's often a bit roly.

The administrative center (including the Gendarmerie) is located near the NE corner of the Bay, a three-minute walk from the town quay, where local fishing boats Med-moor behind a concrete sea wall. Adjacent is a small-boat launch ramp, beyond which is a busy dinghy docking area along the quay, equipped with two steel ladders. When the harbor is churned up it can be a bit dicey to scramble ashore here, but normally it's relatively easy — especially if you plan your arrival with a high tide in settled weather. Note: Always tie-up with a long dinghy painter to accommodate the swell, and allow room for other dinghies.

For most new arrivals, your first stop ashore will probably be at Nuku Hiva Yacht Services, less than 50 yards from the dinghy dock. NHYS is run by American ex-pat Kevin Ellis, who arrived here on a sailboat, fell in love with a lovely Polynesian girl named Annabella, and eventually decided to fill a much-needed niche, offering a wide range of services for cruisers. Phone: 689 40 92 07 50

NHYS is an independently operated company, but Kevin and his crew also function as sub-agents of TahitiCrew yacht agency. As such, Kevin can assist you with clearing in, obtaining a duty-free fuel certificate (25-40% savings), organizing and turning in paperwork to the High Commissioner's office to complete your Long Stay Visa (Carte de Sejour) process, and a range of other local services.

Even If you're operating without an agent, you'll probably want to check in with Kevin to learn about local regulations and procedures. Kevin is basically the go-to guy for a wide range of services. (And no, as we reiterate every year, you cannot get the duty-free fuel certificate here without the help of an agent. In Tahiti, yes, but here, no.) Kevin will charge you on an à la carte basis if you need his help.

You can get free WiFi at the quayside snack stand, or a stronger signal for a fee from Kevin at NHYS. Also, ask Kevin for your official PPJ burgee if you didn't get one from us already in Nuevo Vallarta or Panama.

At the snack stand try the local favorite, poisson cru. It's fresh tuna marinated in coconut milk; sort of a Marquesan ceviche. It's awesome. And if you're thirsty, try a glass of fresh-squeezed pampelmousse juice.

Within a few minutes walk from the quay, you'll find a bank with ATM machines, an Air Tahiti ticket office, an excellent tattoo parlor, a pharmacy, a public trash bin, a recycling center, a post office, a (reservations-only) pizza restaurant, at least two pensions, two small hardware stores, a recently opened marine store and a fuel station (behind to commercial wharf, east side of the entry channel).

But after first coming ashore, kissing the ground, and clearing in, you'll probably be most interested in reprovisioning. There are five food stores (magasins), three along the waterfront, and two a short walk uphill. If the word uphill sounds like a deal-breaker, know that most food shops will give you a ride back to the dock if you make substantial purchases. And, as we discovered during the initial Covid lockdown here in 2020, some will actually allow you to email in an order, then they'll deliver it to the dinghy dock the same afternoon. (Generally, cash only.)

See details at the end of this Fleet Letter.

Please note also, that new arrivals are requested to stop either City Hall and pay a fee of 1500 XPF (about $US 15) for garbage collection and water access.

About Hiva Oa

Hiva Oa's main anchorage, Tahauku Bay, is well protected, but it can get pretty full during the peak 'arrival' season -- May through July -- requiring most boats to anchor bow and stern. If the acreage is too crowded you can anchor outside the seawall when the weather is mild or moderate.

A lovely Marquesan woman named Sandra Wullaert is a great resource here. Like Kevin, she operates independently, and when called on, as a sub-agent for TahitiCrew. She will do your laundry, provide you with Wi-Fi, deliver fresh produce to you, and give you a ride to Atuona, the Island's administrative center, where you can clear in at the Gendarmarie.

In this small town, you'll also find a bank with an outdoor ATM, a post office, several grocery stores, a couple of restaurants and other services.

Because of the Marquesas' location so close to the equator it is virtually impossible for them to experience hurricane-force storms, which is why some cruisers choose to leave their boats on the hook and unattended in Taiohae Bay or on the hard at Hiva Oa's boatyard, Maintenance Marqueses Service, located adjacent to Tahauku anchorage. Phone 689 87 20 99 49

A big shout-out to Laura of the Swiss cat Olena and Linny of the Aussie ketch Peregee, for helping me put together the comprehensive, multilingual shopping list below. Use it to cut and paste into your email order. (We encourage you to spread around your patronage, but I must say I had great service from Hoata, which is a 15-minute walk from the quay.)

Have fun!
